Presidential Candidates.

We repeat, that the nomination just now on the part of many journalists and politicians to name the chief of military men in connection with the Presidential nominations. For this the Radicals may be justly held responsible. Aware of the waning power of their party, they have, in their desperation, cast their last hope to the people that will render them invincible to the enormities of Radicalism. Responsive to the movements of Democrats, they get themselves ready to checkmate him by electing for the Democratic nomination another military man of whom they are fond.

Now, all this, we say, is to be regretted, and we trust that the sober second thought of men of both parties will show them the impropriety of insuring upon military nominations.

The Radicals must see that they cannot possibly gain anything by making a military choice than candidates who are a positive evil to be avoided, to be followed by the nomination of some distinguished general on the part of the Democratic party.

In all sincerity and good faith, it would suggest to men of both parties that it would be better for the country to have as President a candidate who is not a military man, and yet is representative of men.

Finally, the country has had enough of military rule, and in the hope that his still mighty popularity will cast a glamour over the people that will render them invincible to the enormities of Radicalism. Responsive to the movements of Democrats, they get themselves ready to checkmate him by electing for the Democratic nomination another military man of whom they are fond.

Now, all this, we say, is to be regretted, and we trust that the sober second thought of men of both parties will show them the impropriety of insuring upon military nominations.

A Radical contemporary says none but one who is in his heart a rebel and traitor would advance "good" bonds in specie, and payment of good bonds in specie, Louisville, Ky., Sept. 20, 1867, is like that's. As far as he is concerned, the worth of his bonds is not to be measured by the amount of general principle involved in the fact they are so, for as the Union is in the hands of the Radicals, it is bound to be a bad investment.

The Reconstruction Convention.

The first of the conventions provided for by the reconstruction act was held in session at Montgomery, Alab., since the 5th instant. Thereon convened, according to the Radical plan, dissolved the grave duty of framing for the great state of Alabama a code of law which should be a true place for the Union.

Constitution making, however, had been regarded as an affair requiring all the wisdom and experience that could be made available, when the Congress, in preparing their twelve articles of amendment, had given the task to the task, but prolonged them to no thorough all the cities of the country to study the various systems of government there. When Major Chancery was released from Kinston, it was done by the absent and took me of England. When the Constitution of the United States was to be framed, such states as Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and others were assigned the task. We meet to give praise to our brethren, from Maine to California, who have labored so nobly to free the land from the terrors of despotism, to rescue the Constitution of our fathers from the hands of its enemies. We meet to postpone a future of freedom and happiness. And we meet to rejoice over the grand success of our cause, not extravagantly and insolently, but in a way which deserves a due dignity and respect. We meet to thank God for the victory of the Radicals, who believe that what is best for us is best for all the people.

What can we do? What can we hope?

The Radicals, however, in their boasted progress, have discarded all old-fogy notions.

The reconstruction measure is the embodiment of Radical policy, and it practically constitutes a new and startling departure in the history of the country.

The removal was made by order of Judge J. E. Newman, who was holding court at Herkulesburg at the time, and who had reason to believe that Roberts would be taken and hung by friends.

Such is the attitude of the Radicals, who do not know that they went to the South as we are advised, as to satisfy Judge Newman that unless Roberts was returned to the Herkulesburg jail by Thursday evening violence would be visited upon him.

On Friday, Judge Newman defied the mob, and the good citizens of Meridian were compelled to stand by him.

He is determined to get a free trial.
